INTELLIGENCE UPDATE: Dealing with Protests in Brazil.

The organized gathering processes for protests in Brazil rely on centralized planning and organization; the mob has planned to violently express itself by destroying property, assaulting others and creating an extremely volatile environment. The protestors and the responding riot police will attack anyone who gets in the way.

Risks Caused by Protestors: Extreme acts of violence and property damage are highly likely to take place; destroying both private and government property. The protestors will erect illegal barricades and physical barriers to impede vehicular traffic and the movement of police in the area, as well as setting fires and preventing firefighter's access. Brazilian protestors have historically used Molotov cocktails, rocks, bricks, bottles, sticks, pieces of lumber and slingshots against police personnel, vehicles and anyone who gets in their way.

Risks Caused by Riot Police: The riot police in Brazil do not use a "soft response" towards protestors; they use 36-inch wood riot batons, 12-gauge shotguns loaded with M1013 less-than-lethal munitions, .23 caliber hard rubber pellets, flash-bang grenades and CS spray all of which can cause serious injury or death. The riot police are equipped with Flex-Cuffs, Helmets with face shields, Groin protectors, Flak vests, Elbow pads, Leather gloves, Shin protectors, lethal and less-than-lethal weapons. Keep at least a five mile radius away from any protest sites.
